

TOPIC 4: PERFORMANCE APPRAISAL

Meaning

Performance Appraisal is systematic or formal evaluation of an employee' s performance over a given period of time.

Reasons for Appraisal

1. To identify the individuals amount of job performance – whether is at acceptable levels or not.
2. To provide record of such employee' s performance for the purpose of incentive pay and rewards.
3. To identify “misplaced” employees so that suitable remedial may be taken.
4. To motivate individual employees.
5. To identify training and development needs amongst employees.
6. To identify the strengths and weakness of individuals so that timely stops may be taken to improve the quality of personnel etc.
7. To focus attention on effectiveness of organization and to recognize individual achievement.

There are two types of appraisal

- i. Formal
- ii. Informal

Informal appraisal is not recorded or the outcome kept as part of organizational records though it can be done on a daily basis. Formal appraisal is an organized activity whose outcome guides several decisions in organization.

Appraisal Methods

1. Ranking Method

Employees are compared with one another on an overall basis and are ranked from best to poorest. The best or most efficient employee is ranked as number one and the poorest is ranked as number last.

Main disadvantage is that ratings are subject to the judgment and bias of the rater who has to consider a whole man.

Demerit-It does not reveal amount of difference between employees.
Only shows how one is in relation to others.

2 Graphic Rating Scale

Evaluation forms which contain a number of objectives, and trait qualities and characters to be rated like quality of work and amount of work, job knowhow dependability, initiative, attitude, leadership quality and emotional stability.

The rater gives an estimate the extent to which subordinates possess each quality. The extent to which quality is possessed is measured on a scale which can vary from three points to several points. In general practice five-point scales is used. Some organizations use numbers in order to avoid the propensity of the rater to tick mark central points. It may be numbered or defined. Thus numbers like 5, 4, 3, 2 and 1 may denote points for various degrees of excellent-poor, high-low, or good-bad, and so on. Such numbers may be expressed in terms like excellent, very good, average, poor and very poor; or very high, high, average, low and very low.

Graphic scale method is good for measuring various job behaviors of an employee. But, it is bound to limitations of rater's bias while rating employee's behavior at job.

3 Forced Distribution Method: This method was evolved to abolish the trend of rating most of the employees at a higher end of the scale. The fundamental assumption in this method is that employees' performance level conforms to a normal statistical distribution. For example, 10 per cent employees may be rated as excellent, 40 per cent as above average, 20 per cent as average, 10 per cent below average, and 20 per cent as poor. It eliminates or minimizes the favoritism of rating many employees on a higher side. It is simple and easy method to appraise employees. It becomes difficult when the rater has to explain why an employee is placed in a particular grouping as compared to other.

4 Critical Incidents Method

Written records are kept regarding highly favourable and highly unfavorable work actions. When such actions affect institution effectiveness significantly entail positively or negatively, the superior writes down, and that is considered critical incident.

The exceptional events or occasions are known as "critical incidents". Each incidence represents a critical situation in the course of work and the reaction of an employee during it reflects his success or failure.

Raters are required to record the reactions of an employee during critical situations.

The method is however, tedious and time consuming when there are many employees.

5 The use of Essay Method:

In essay method the rater assesses the employees on certain parameters in his own words.

Parameters used in essay method are:

1. Work performance informs of quality, quantity and costs.
2. Knowledge about job.
3. Knowledge about organization policies overall suitability of employee.
4. Employee characteristics and behaviour.

6 Check List Method:

The rater provides appraisal report by answering several questions related to the employee.

The questions prepared are related to work e.g.

1. Is she interested in job Yes/No?
2. Is he/she regular on the job?
3. Does he follow instructions properly?
4. Does he maintain discipline?

The rater simply ticks yes /no

7 Appraisal by results or objectives – also known as management by objectives.

It is a method of management as well as method of appraisal.

Steps involved in appraisal by results are:

1. It is a joint process between superior and his subordinates.
2. The subordinates prepare his plan for specific period in light of overall plan provided by superior. The final plan is prepared through mutual consultation.
3. Both the subordinate and superior decide on evaluation method, factors to consider and role of supervisor.
4. After specified period, the superior makes performance evaluation of subordinate based on the earlier agreed on criteria.
5. Superior discusses the results of evaluation with subordinate, corrective actions of necessary are suggested and they agree to set targets for next period.

8 360 Degree Feedback

It is also known as multi source feedback, it is a process in which someone's performance is assessed and feedback given by a number of people around the person majorly the manager, subordinates, colleagues, customer etc.

Data is usually obtained from questionnaire that measure different perspectives of individuals against list of competences. A typical questionnaire may cover aspects of performance such as leadership, team work, communication, organizational skills, decisiveness, drive and adaptability.

The ratings are given by the generations of the feedback on a scale against each heading.

Advantages of 360° Feedback

- Individuals get broader perspective of how they are perceived by others.
- Gives a more rounded view of their performance.
- Increased awareness and relevance of competencies.
- Increased awareness by sermon management that they too have developed.

Disadvantages:

- People do not always give frank or honest feedback.
- Lack of action following feedback.
- Over reliance on technology.

THE PERFORMANCE APPRAISAL PROCESS

The performance appraisal system of one organization may vary from other organizations, though some of the specific steps that an organization may follow are as follows:

1. Establish Performance Standards: It begins by establishing performance standards i.e. what they expect from their employee in terms of outputs, accomplishments and skills that they will evaluate with the passage of time. The standards set should be clear and objective enough to be understood and measured. The standards which are set are evolved out of job analysis and job descriptions. The expectation of the manager from his employee should be clear so that it could be communicated to the subordinates that they will be appraised against the standards set for them.

2. Communicating the Standards Set for an Employee: Once the standards for performance are set it should be communicated to the concerned employee, about what is expected from them in terms of performance. It should not be part of the employees' job to estimate what they are expected to do. Communication is said to be two ways, mere passing of information to subordinate does not mean that the work is done. Communication only takes place when the information given has taken place and has been received and understood by subordinate. . If necessary, the standards may be tailored or revised in the light of feedback obtained from the employees.

3. Measuring of the Actual Performances: It is one of the most crucial steps of performance appraisal process. It is very important to know as how the performance will be measured and what should be measured, thus four important sources frequently used by managers are personal observation, statistical reports, oral reports, and written reports. What we measure gives an idea about what people in an organization will attempt to achieve. The criteria which are considered must represent performance as stated in the first two steps of the appraisal process.

4. Comparing Actual Performance with Standards Set in the Beginning: In this step of performance appraisal the actual performance is compared with the expected or desired standard set. A comparison between actual or desired standard may disclose the deviation between standard performance and actual performance and will allow the evaluator to carry on with the discussion of the appraisal with the concerned employees.

5. Discussion with the Concerned Employee

It gives an idea to the employee regarding their strengths and weaknesses. The impact of this discussion may be positive or negative.

The impression that subordinates receive from their assessment has a very strong impact on their self esteem and, is very important, for their future performances.

6. Initiate Corrective Action: Corrective action can be of two types; one is instant and deals primarily with symptoms. The other is basic and deals with the causes. Instant corrective action is often described as "putting out fires" , whereas basic corrective action gets to the source from where deviation has taken place and seeks to adjust the differences permanently. Instant action corrects something right at a particular point and gets things back on track.

Basic action asks how and why performance deviated. In some instances, managers may feel that they do not have the time to take basic corrective action and thus may go for “perpetually put out fires

PROBLEMS WITH APPRAISAL

1. Lack of objectivity – most of the factors (attributes) are not measurable e.g. attitude, loyalty, personality and hospitality.
2. Halo effect where rating in one faction may affect rating in other qualities or one factor becomes paramount.
3. Different raters may apply different standards in appraisal and their judgments may differ e.g. some raters may hastate to assign poor ranks to employees with low performance and other may rank people high.
4. Personal Bias – where employee is either appraised poorly or highly depending on personal attitudes.
5. Recent behaviour bias where one is appraised based on recent developments whether negative or positive.
6. The process of performance appraisal may create defensiveness among employees as most appraisal emphasize on uniformity.

Essentials of an Effective Appraisal System

1. Job Relatedness

The appraisal method should measure the performance and provide job related information.

2. Reliability and Validity

Appraisal system should provide consistent, reliable and valid information which can be used to defend the organization even in legal challenges.

It is reliable if two different raters can give same result of an individual validity when it measures what is intended to measure.

3. Standardization

The appraisal procedures should be standard as it affects employees of all groups.

4. Legal Sanction

The appraisal practices must comply with provisions of various acts relating to labour.

5. Should be Viable

The technique should be practically viable to administer, possible to implement and economical to undertake.

6. Appraisal should be trained

The appraisers should be trained so that they are well aware of their job and the related documentation. They should be objective and not subjective.

7. Open Communication

A good appraisal system should provide feedback on continuing basis. Communication will help both parties know the gaps and prepare for the future. Employees should be allowed to review the results of their appraisal so that they can detect errors if any.

8. Due Process should be Followed

Formal procedures should be developed to enable employees who disagree with results to have a means of pursuing their grievances.

Uses of performance appraisal results

Promotion: Performance Appraisal helps the supervisors to chalk out the promotion programmes for efficient employees. It helps in identifying those that should be promoted and those who should not.

Compensation: Performance Appraisal helps in chalking out compensation packages for employees. Merit rating is possible through performance appraisal. Performance Appraisal tries to give worth to a performance.

Employees Development: It helps the supervisors to frame training policies and programmes.

It helps to analyse strengths and weaknesses of employees so that new jobs can be designed for efficient employees. It also helps in framing future development programmes.

Selection Validation: Performance Appraisal helps the supervisors to understand the validity and importance of the selection procedure. The supervisors come to know the validity and thereby the strengths and weaknesses of selection procedure. Future changes in selection methods can be made in this regard.

Communication: For an organization, effective communication between employees and employers is very important. Through performance appraisal, communication can be sought for in the following ways:

1. Through performance appraisal, the employers can understand and accept skills of subordinates.

2. The subordinates can also understand and create a trust and confidence in superiors.
3. It also helps in maintaining cordial and congenial labour management relationship.
4. It develops the spirit of work and boosts the morale of employees.

All the above factors ensure effective communication.

- Motivation: Performance appraisal serves as a motivation tool.

Through evaluating performance of employees, a person's efficiency can be determined if the targets are achieved. This very well motivates a person for better job and helps him to improve his performance in the future.

<https://www.managementstudyguide.com/performance-appraisal-tools.htm>
for further reading

TOPIC 5: TRAINING AND DEVELOPMENT OF EMPLOYEES

Training is an organized activity aimed at imparting information and/or instructions to improve the recipients' performance or to help him/her attain a required level of knowledge or skills (business dictionary).

When people are recruited, they will have basic knowledge but no skills, training facilitate the learning to enable people do their jobs.

Main reasons for training are:

- Increase the knowledge of workers in doing specific jobs
- Impart new skills among the workers systematically so that they learn quickly
- Bring about change in the attitude of workers towards fellow workers, supervisors and the organization.
- Improve the overall performance of the organization

- Make workers handle materials, machines and equipment efficiently thus check wastage on time and resources
- Reduce the number of accidents by providing safety training
- Prepare workers for higher jobs by developing advanced skills in them
- Critical information can be impacted through training.

DEVELOPMENT

Development is any activity designed to improve the performance of existing managers and to provide for a planned growth of managers to meet factors organizational requirement.

Training and development are terms used to mean the same thing though they are different.

Training is a short term process utilizing systematic and organized procedure by which non managerial personnel learn technical knowledge, development is a long term educational process utilizing a systematic and organized procedure by which management personnel learn conceptual and theoretical knowledge.

Differences:

Training	Development
Non managerial staff involved	Managerial personnel are involved
Technical know-how imparted for specific job	Conceptual ideas for variety of jobs.
Short term	Long term

IDENTIFYING TRAINING NEEDS

Before training and developing employees, the need must be ascertained. The following methods can be used to determine training needs of an organization.

1. Organization Analysis

Involves detailed analysis of organization structure, objectives, human resources and future plans and all this will facilitate understanding of deficiencies that need to be rectified. If there is training that can help achieve objectives then it can be done.

2. Task Analysis

Task analysis is also known as job analysis. Job analysis reveals the skills required for a certain job. Comparison of job requirements with existing employees skills help to reveal gaps if any.

3. Performance Appraisal

Involves assessment of employee performance in relation to the set standard. If an employee below the standard, it is possible that there is need for training in order to improve the performance.

4. Human Resource Audit

Though audit or surveys, employees are requested to describe problems, they are experiencing in their work and the possible solution which may include training.

TRAINING METHODS

Once training need has been ascertained, the management organizes to train employees depending on relevant of skills need.

Training can be:

- On job training
- Off job training

ON JOB TRAINING

It is training while doing the job itself. The trainee learns while he is actually engaged in doing a job. This can be on a specific job on various jobs depending on the skills required.

On job training can be done through the following:

Job Rotation

Where an employee is moved from one job to another in the same organization. In order to learn how those jobs are done. Job rotation is useful when it is undertaken in interdependent jobs or functions that is why in most cases job rotation is restricted to jobs falling within broad fractional area like sales to marketing research.

Advantages of Job Rotation

1. It provides the employees with opportunities to broaden the horizon of knowledge, skills, and abilities by working in different departments, business units, functions, and countries.
2. Identification of Knowledge, skills, and attitude required for different jobs
3. It determines the areas where improvement is required

4. Assessment of the employees who have the potential and caliber for filling the position
5. Workers develop cooperative approach to different functions in the organization.

Disadvantages:

- May confuse a trainee and may not be able to understand the rationale for job rotation.

Coaching / Understudy

- Coaching involves direct personal instructions and guidance usually with demonstration and continuous critical evaluation and correction.
- In understudy method, the trainee works normally as assistant under the direction and supervision of a person.
- It is good for training someone to occupy key position in organization.
- Advantage of coaching is that it provides feedback to the trainee and therefore measures can be taken to overcome shortcomings.
- Disadvantage is that the trainer methods and habits be transferred to the trainee which might not be good at all.

To make Coaching Effective, the following should be met;

- Ability to communicate and stimulate learning in a trainee.
- Trainer should provide good model with whom trainee can identify.
- Assistance should be rendered to trainee when he/she needs it.

Induction Training

This type of training is offered to new employees to be productive. It is done to avoid costly mistakes that new recruits may make by them not knowing the procedures or techniques of their new jobs. The length of induction varies from job to job, information provided includes: duties of the job, meeting new colleagues, values and aims of the organization, policies of the organization etc.

Advantages of on Job Training

Generally most cost-effective

1. Employees are actually productive
2. Opportunity to learn whilst doing
3. Training alongside real colleagues.

4. Training can be delivered on time and at the optimum time.
5. The trainee will have the good opportunities to practice and implement.
6. The trainee will have feedbacks.
7. Trainee builds confidence by working with own speed and productivity

Disadvantages

1. Potential disruption to production occurs.
2. Working time is wasted for training.

OFF JOB TRAINING

Off job training methods consists of activities that occur while an employee is not working. This is to provide trainees with skills they can use later.

Employees may be sponsored by employees to take certain courses offered. Learning can be through distance, event or correspondence.

Methods of Off Job Training:

Lecturers and Conferences

Lecture is one way communication where one person (trainee) passes information to the trainee by verbal means. Lecturers can be implemented with group discussions, audio – visual aids, motion pictures or television lecture based training is an effective way to facilitate the transition of theories concepts, procedures and factual materials.

Conference method provides opportunity for two way communication. Guided discussions are the types of conferences meant for meaningful interaction among participants.

E – learning

It is interactive training developed and delivered online. It is fastest growing and most people who do not have time to attend normal classroom situations can enroll on different institutions.

Advantages of E-Learning

- Self paced
- Standardization of training over time
- Fast and effective for training number of people.
- Reduced travel costs.

Disadvantages

- Suitable for those people who have access to computers.
- It is costly.

Audio and Video Media

- Where individuals are trained by watching and listening to films, videos, slides and flip charts.
- Video is used very much in conferences or even in role conferencing.
- The audio and video media are usually used to supplement other training technique including lecturers and self directed learning.

Simulation

It is duplication of organizational situations in learning environment.

Simulation has the following characteristics:

1. Essentials of real life situation are presented in abstracted form force as whole characteristics are difficult to be simulated.
2. Events and situations may be presented in belief, leaving out many details.
3. Trainers are allowed to participate fully.
4. At the end of instruction, it provides the feedback to participants to evaluate themselves and to strengthen themselves by overcoming their weak points.
5. Problems from various perspectives of various roles are also given

Case study

A case study is a description of a situation involving problems to be solved.

Learning through case method involves analysis of the case to identify problems involved, identifying alternatives for the solution of the problems, evaluation of the alternative and to arrive at a decision to solve problem For people to benefit from case study, the cases should be appropriate to learning situations and suit the level of maturity of participants.

Apprenticeship

Method of training mostly used in craft and technical areas where proficiency in a job is acquired by long period training. In apprenticeship training, major part of training time is spent on the productive job.

Each trainee is given a program of assigning according to predetermine schedule which provides training in concerned area. It is on-job training within instructional embracing the entire period of training.

OTHER OFF JOB TRAINING METHODS

Role Playing

A training method under which participants assume certain roles and enact them spontaneously under classroom conditions.

In role playing session, participants are assigned the roles by turns, which two or more trainees enact the roles assigned to them, others act.

Vestibule Training

The training in vestibule school is preliminary to actual shop experience. Vestibule training is an attempt to duplicate as nearly as possible the actual working conditions of the work place. The trainees can develop skills while working in situations similar to what they face at actual work place. It consists of lectures for theoretical work and practical exercises based on the theoretical aspects.

Management Games

It involves a group exercise in decision making as regards an administrative problem situation.

Almost similar to role playing, the difference is that role playing seeks to emphasize feelings and relationships but management games are more concerned with administration problem.

Management game involves a number of participants in small groups, which are in competitions with one another. The trainer specifies the various situations of the game and any decision making by groups with regard to areas or departments entrusted to them will have to be within parameters of a system which is not fully known to them.

The decisions are processed in the light of the parameters and feedback is provided to the competing groups for subsequent decision making.

Since decisions making by each group is to affect decision by other groups, the feedback provided by the trainer helps them to evaluate and modify each decision so as to achieve optimum results.

A management game can highlight the strong and weak points in an organization as regards its communication system group relationships and human factor in decision making.

Sensitivity Training

A training where there is interaction between members of small informal and unstructured groups. Under strained condition so that members become sensitive to each other's feeling in order to develop reasonable group activity.

Characteristics of Sensitivity Training

1. The members of a group are less than 20
2. There is no formal agenda so that members agree on what to do.
3. There is strained environment / artificial environment.
4. Trainer's role is to restore stability, provide feedback, make assignments and create learning situations.
5. The group process is of important how groups work and learning from experiences of group making.

Advantages

1. Sensitivity training results in more supportive behaviour, more sensitive people and considerate managers.
2. Improves communication and develops leadership skills.
3. Makes participants to become more open and self understanding.

Disadvantages

1. Incites anxiety with many negative impacts like causing the people to be frustrated, unsettled and upset.
2. It is doubtful if sensitivity training could lead to real improvement on the job.
3. Participants increased sensitivity may be continuity source of frustration and problem often resuming work.

Assertiveness Training (AT)

Training seeks to teach people alternative set of behaviour in case of any conflict instead of:

- Withdrawing from situation
- Suppressing the feelings
- Revolt and strike back in anger.

It is teaching people to acquire skills such as:

- Express feelings without much let or hindrance.
- Not shy of seeking favours from people.
- Can say no to unreasonable facts.

Evaluation of Training

- Training should be evaluated several times during the process. Employees should be evaluated by comparing their newly acquired skills with the skills defined by the goals of the training program. Any discrepancies should be noted and adjustments made to the training program to enable it to meet specified goals. Many training programs fall short of their expectations simply because the administrator failed to evaluate its progress until it was too late. Timely evaluation will prevent the training from straying from its goals.
-

Advantages of employee training and development

1. It helps in improving performance of employee by increasing their knowledge and skills. It is believed that productivity increases with level of knowledge and skills.
2. Uniformity of Procedures – through training standardization of work can be achieved which in turn leads to improved quality.
3. Manpower development – helps to fill manpower gaps by proving workers with relevant skills that they require to fill certain gaps in the organization.
4. Proper use of resources
Trained employees make better use of materials and equipment.
There is also reduced accidents at work and every resource is put to optimum use.
5. Training helps to reduce the need for close and constant supervision of workers. It is for that a well trained employee does not need any assistance to do his work.
6. Delegation of work and autonomy
It facilitates delegation an decentralization of authority as trained workers are more willing to accept challenging tasks. Training also helps to strengthening management.
7. Increases moral of workers
Job satisfaction can be achieved through training and productivity.
When employees have positive attitude, they will be more cooperative and loyal to work.

Training enables employees to utilize and develop their full potential with few cases of absenteeism and labour turnover.

MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT

Management concerned with improving the performance of managers in their present roles and prepares them to take greater responsibilities in future.

Managers need to be developed as they require skills to:

1. Develop relationships and focus on the customer building partnership with both internal and external customers.
2. Balance technical and generic skills in human relationships.
3. Work across boundaries engaging with others as team, thinking different about problems and their solutions.
4. Manage people and performance.
5. Empower and develop people.

ROLE OF HUMAN RESOURCE IN MANAGEMENT DEVELOPMENT

1. Interpret the needs of business and advice on how management development strategies can help in meeting needs.
2. Act as advocates of significance of management development and make proposals for management development.
3. Develop frameworks that can provide a basis for management development.
4. Coaches and mentors to individual manager by groups of managers.
5. Provide guidance to managers on how to carry out developmental activities.
6. Encouragement and help in major in pursuing their self-directed learning activities.
7. Plan and conduct final learning events.

CAREER MANAGEMENT AND DEVELOPMENT

- Career is a pattern of work related experiences that span the course of a person's life (Greenhaus, 2000)

Other definitions

- It is an ongoing process of progression through series of stages, each of which is characterized by relatively unique set of issues, themes and tasks.
- Career may mean different things to different people eg.
 1. Advancement – career defines one’ s progression and increasing success within an occupation or organization.
 2. Stability of a person’ s work pattern – a sequence of related jobs is said to describe a career, whereas a sequence of interrelated jobs does not.

An individual’ s career is the sole source of one’ s natural expression of self

CAREER MANAGEMENT

- Career management is an ongoing process of preparing, implementing and monitoring career plans undertaken by individual alone or in concert with organization’ s career systems.
- Career management in an organization is concerned with the provision of opportunities for people to develop their abilities and their careers in order to ensure that organization has the flow of talent that it needs to satisfy its aspirations.

It is a process through which employees:

- i. Become aware of their own interests, values, strengths and weaknesses
- ii. Obtain information about job opportunities within / outside the organization
- iii. Identify career goals
- iv. Establish action plans to achieve career goals.

Career Planning

- Career planning is aimed at identifying personal skills, interests, knowledge and other features and to establish specific plans to attain specific goals.

OBJECTIVES OF CAREER PLANNING

1. Attract and retain the right type of person in the organization
2. Establish stable workforce through reduced turnover
3. Utilize managerial talent available at all levels with the organization
4. Improve employee morale and motivation by matching skills to job requirements and providing opportunities for promotion.
5. Provide guidance and utilize employee potential
6. Achieve higher productivity and organizational development

THE PROCESS OF CAREER MANAGEMENT

An Individually-Oriented Career Management Model

Steps individuals can follow to manage their careers.

1. Career exploration. Career exploration involves gathering information about one's self and the environment.
2. Awareness of self and environment. Successful career exploration will lead the individual to a deeper self-awareness and an understanding of both opportunities and constraints present in the environment.
3. Goal setting. A career goal is an outcome the individual decides to try to obtain. Such goals may be specific (e.g., I want to become a partner in my accounting firm by age 35).
4. Strategy development. A career strategy is an action plan for accomplishing the career goal. An effective strategy should include the actions that should be carried out and a timetable for performing them. Greenhaus lists seven career strategies: competency in the current job, increased involvement in work, developing skills, developing opportunities, cultivating mentor relationships, image building, and engaging in organizational politics.

5. Strategy implementation. Strategy implementation involves carrying out the strategy the individual has developed.
6. Progress toward the goal. This is the extent to which the individual is nearing the career goal.
7. Feedback from work and non-work sources. Valuable information about the progress toward the career goal can be obtained from both work sources (such as co-workers, supervisors, and specialists) and non-work sources (such as friends, family, and teachers)
8. Career appraisal. Feedback and information on progress toward the career goal permits the individual to appraise his or her career.

Recommendations for Organizations

Although it is an employee's responsibility to manage his or her own career but times have changed and it is now employer's responsibility too to provide their employees with tools and techniques, professional career guidance and opportunities so that they can enhance their skills and re-invent themselves.

It is employer's responsibility to create an environment that supports continuous learning and overall development of individuals. It can be done through professional training, associations, workshops, etc.

Organizations such as Motorola, Intel and Ford are known as people developers just because they offer supportive environment to their employees.

The organizations must make arrangements to provide additional training such as orientation training, core training and computer training in order to increase employability of the employees. Along with this, they should support this with a proper reward system.

Before hiring new candidates or outsourcing, organizations must try to redeploy their already existing employees and teach them new skills.

They should assist employees in striking a balance between their work and non-work life so that they can produce better output at work.

Changes

The main focus of organizations today is on the employability of individuals. They should not hold on to a specific job. Rather they should focus on developing skills and competencies that are portable and can be used anywhere and everywhere in the time crisis.

Individuals must take care of their career needs, desires and aspirations. They need to take control of their careers and look out for their career interests. After all, they also have right to look out for their dream jobs.

They must think of developing new and better personal skills in order to achieve their dream careers. Plus, they should make every effort to assess themselves and their competencies and plan their careers accordingly. Most organizations lack in employee career planning. In such a scenario, the entire responsibility comes on individuals to choose their own direction.

Employees must invest in reputation building, networking, socializing and peer learning relationships so that they can fulfill their desires and aspirations.

Individuals must be committed towards lifelong learning to keep their skills updated and relevant to increase their employability.